I love the new brush engine. I just wish they'd release on my iPhone and iPad Pro dual app. When the iPad Pro will try to mount an SD card it will say "not a valid peripheral, show the mount fail dialog and ask if you want to retry." I've had this problem a few times now. I think I may have used a 4GB card. I don't know why it doesn't mount... Any ideas? Thanks. Adobe Photoshop Mobile features a new feature called multi-person view, which allows multiple users to simultaneously view an image on their iPad or Android device in real-time. Although I'm sure all this new mobile features leverage Adobe Sensei AI, I wouldn't have expected Adobe to do this in Creative Cloud. Nonetheless, I've gone this entire year in photo with this hot new feature. I've only used it for small, non-destructive edits, but I feel like it has a lot of potential. For example, if I were working with a number of photographers, I could zoom into an image of a subject that all agreed on, and all people could work on the zones by using filters from their respective devices. In theory, I think this could be a truly awesome image creation platform, especially if it can really stream these images to a single page. It's hard to imagine, but I like the idea. Yet another section hereabouts. My usual workflow favors manual over automated tasks, but I am starting to adapt to the new way things are done. I've been involved with several online photo reviews, and I'm always looking for the next innovative feature. The most exciting, for me, has been the inclusion of live effects and the ability to easily control those effects in a post workflow.

While Photoshop is already at the top of the creative stack, Adobe wants to redefine the industry and improve how the world creates, communicates and displays content. Whether it’s output on the web, print or screen, Adobe is listening and researching the ways that Photoshop can serve as a central creative hub across the entire creative process. Carefully thought out and created, Adobe XD is a web-based, multi-device app that provides the right tools to bring your digital prototypes to life. At MAX, Adobe XD will deliver a preview of its web app for iOS, allowing you to interact with prototypes in new ways and change as needed, without having to leave the desktop at all. From existing features such as smart guides, to new features such as Fix Fraction, Photoshop will play a much larger role in your workflow. You will be able to set specific paths to guide you through your edit and use the common design elements on your layer to adjust the final layout. Making a prototype and iterating on your creative idea is essential for getting the right result that you and your team will love. At MAX, Creative Director at Adobe Bryan Singer will demonstrate the ease and speed of iterating designs with the Adobe XD App—all from the comfort of the desktop. To help you cut out the usual frustration of having to identify the all the things you could change to create a new image, the new “Make” workspace will provide the icons, tools and library of default stock items that you need. This is a simple approach that allows you to quickly see the results of your edits and make a single click to save—something that is impossible to do otherwise.
